

Etiquetting The Police

Next time you bump into the neighbourhood policeman, don't panic, you may even find a suave Samaritan at your service. Because amchi Maharashtra's state police has finally decided to opt for a savvy reorientation as per the dictates of the day. So we have Minocher Patel, founder director of Pune-based finishing school Ecole Solitaire, recently conduct a four-day workshop for the Maharashtra State Police at Nashik on self development, effective communication and people skills. The workshop was attended in full force by about 131 PSI's and five DSP's. Says Additional Director General of Police K.Kashyap, "Attitudinal changes are the most required traits in the police today. Such a training will go a long way in helping the police inspire confidence for the force in the society." Saying amen to this noble thought, one only hopes the skills acquired here will not limit themselves to the strict workshop environs and rather spill over to tone down the police's big brother attitude of interaction when it comes to dealing with the common populace on the streets and in the police station.
